Miss Fenwick, who saw a motion picture camera for the first time under George Kleine's direction in

The Commuters," has given one of the rarest and most beautiful examples of character portrayal in the history of film plays in her last picture. "The Woman Next Door." The gentle, timid, pathetic figure of Jenny Gay, socially ostracized by the village folk and persecuted to the point of desperation has given Miss Fenwick a role exactly suited to her temperament and remarkable talents, careful direction and the experience of the last few months, coupled with her native capabilities, have already made one of the greatest of film actresses of the former dainty star of "The Song of Songs."

The three rings, aerial enclave sporting plaza, and various modern amusement devices are far greater proportioned than those of any other similar traveling organization in this country. There is absolutely nothing that the other shows have that this show has not, and a whole lot more than the other shows have.

The courteous treatment that is given patrons is commendable, and the management at all times consider their comfort and their own in-terest as secondary. Seats with the most modern and comfortable back and foot rests are provided, and a corps of fifty uniformed ushers are in constant attendance to answer all civil questions promptly and politely Tosterday's desults.
